"On the brink of a record deal."

Indie-Music.com

"This nine-piece white reggae group from a Midwestern town makes authentic Jamaican music-believe it or not."

What's Goin' Down

The blackest white reggae band in the world, Public Property is on the rise with the release of its second album "What's Goin Down".

From the heart of the heartland, in just two short years the band has recorded 2 records, built a "rapturous fan base" by touring hard and often, and has raised the bar on modern reggae. With three female vocalists and a 6-man rhythm section, the band's hybrid of reggae, ska, hip hop, and Hawaiian ukulele-led skanks "could save American reggae from the weedheads". Whaa?

Whether it's the searing, social messages, the party uke songs, or the three lovely ladies harmonizing that seduce you to the groove, one thing is undisputed: Public Property is hot. And gangsta. Damn! Check it out.

Reggae Reviews

"PP's sound is full and lush, complete with a trio of female background singers that bolster already strong melodies with soothing harmonies . . . 'What's Goin Down' is a polished, accomplished album that could very well expand beyond the collegiate, WTO-protesting crowd to become nationally renowned."
